MOTHERHOOD WOMAN'S JOY

Suggestions to Childless Women.

Among the virtues of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the ability to correct sterility in the cases of many women. This fact is well established as evidenced by the following letter and hundreds of others we have published in these colums.

Be-Niell made a 205-mile trip through the cause of a surplus of Irish potatoes from the first crop many farmers in the south are asking the department if it is advisable to try to carry this crop into the winter. Department specialists do not believe such a practice should be encouraged because it would require much better storage conditions than are now possessed or that could be provided economically. The second crop, harvested at a cooler season, can be stored successfully in cheap and ordinary farm storage and kept until spring. Farmers should, however, be able to

Love Letter

By F. A. MITCHEL

"My boy," said Thomas Brackett to his son, Tom, "I congratulate you with all my heart on this engagement of yours to Adele. She is a lovely and noble girl, and I am delighted to welcome her into our family circle. I am glad to be with you at this time. It is very important to you and Adele. I consider marriage the most important event in one's life. It is, unlike birth and death, controlled. I trust you and Adele will take it seriously, and, above all things, do not fall into that sickly sentimentalism so common among lovers. Love letters, so called, filled with gush are especially to be avoided. Write plain common sense to each other, with your plans for subject matter. Confine yourselves in the begin-ning to 'dear Adele' and 'dear Tom.' Think how stupid it will seem to you later on to come across 'dearest, sweetest Adele!' She will be then a thousand times dearer to you than she is today, but you will not show it in any such ridiculous way."

"Didn't you write love letters to ma

when you were engaged, dad?" "I don't remember just what I wrote your mother," replied Mr. Brackett, trying to think back to a period when he was twenty-one. "I was considered a matter of fact chap, and I am quite sure I never indulged in lovey-dovey

What Tom and Adele's letters were like does not pertain to this story. young lovers write. Shortly before their marriage Tom went up into the garret to gather such effects as he wished to take with him to his new home and destroy what had lost its original value. Rummaging in an old trunk which contained various family effects, he came across a bunch of old papers. Untying a bundle of letters bound together with a faded narrow ribbon in lieu of tape, he examined them, noting that they had been written nearly a quarter of a century before. He read a number of them, then, selecting one of them, rebound the rest and put them back where he had found

The evening before the wedding the bride and groom to be dined with the Bracketts. When the meal was finished and coffee was brought on Tom took a letter from his pocket and said

"Dad, you gave me a lecture when I became engaged on love letter writing dreams he dreamt when he had time which made a deep impression on me. I found the other day while rummaging among old papers one of those ridiculous epistles written by some fellow who must have had the lover fever very badly. It has convinced me that you are right. If reading such a document produces such contempt for the writer, what would I think of myself at reading such a letter written by myself twenty years from now!" Tom handed the letter to his father, priceless to own, cheap to buy. who put on his glasses and perused it. It read as follows:

My Angel-Don't think that I exaggerate in calling you an angel. I do so becaus you are purer, better, nobler than any girl I have ever known. I only wish I were with you now and could tell you so instead of writing it. I would take you in my arms and give you a million kisses.

I looked for a letter from you by the early mail, but it did not come, so I suppose I'll not get it till noon. I have read the one received yesterday twenty times. I put it under my pillow when I went to bed that it might lead me to dream of you. It did. I dreamed that we were sitting in pink of your ear or the vermilion of your

Mr. Brackett threw the letter on the table in disgust. "Go on," said Tom.

"Go on!" replied the father. "Go on through the twenty pages of such sickening stuff! The man who wrote it should have been tarred and feathered and ridden on a rail. I pity the girl who married him. No doubt he tried to support her writing poetry. Moonlight, music, love and flowers would suit him." The speaker stopped and looked at those about the board. When he began to make his criticisms on the writer of the letter the corners of their lips When he reached the "moonlight, music, love and flowers" all burst into a roar of laughter-that is, all except
